CAREER: Electrical Engineer

Nahashon Alukue is an 18-year-old Form 4 student at St. James Kiaritha Secondary School in central Kenya. He is a bright, hardworking, and determined young man who aspires to become an electrical engineer in the future.

Nahashon is the fourth-born in a family of five boys. Following his parents' separation, he currently lives with his father. His elder brothers completed high school but were unable to proceed to college due to financial challenges and now rely on manual jobs to sustain themselves. His youngest brother is in Grade 2.

Nahashon's father works as a security guard, and his income is barely sufficient to meet the family's basic needs, making it difficult to consistently pay school fees. As a result, Nahashon's education has depended heavily on the support of well-wishers and bursaries from the county government. Despite this support, he is frequently sent home due to unpaid fees, causing him to miss important lessons.

Despite these challenges, Nahashon remains focused, resilient, and determined to succeed academically and achieve his dream of becoming an engineer. His favourite subjects are Chemistry and Kiswahili, in which he consistently performs well. In his free time, he enjoys playing football and going to the gym.

Nahashon's resilience, strong work ethic, and commitment to education make him a deserving student who would greatly benefit from continued educational support.
